

Supreme Lending implemented AR Surveillance to monitor 10 vendors during their first 90-day period. "To achieve our goals, we chose to obtain reports and monitor our critical and higher risk vendors within the Vendor Management Department," said Waite.

Once they realized the ease of use and benefits of AR Surveillance, including a cost savings by purchasing an annual versus monthly subscription, they increased the number of accounts for ongoing monitoring to 75. "For us, that included a segment of vendors based on the initial or annual risk assessment conducted," which allows us to monitor specific vendor profiles and keep cost in line," said Waite.

In addition to the intuitive Dashboard, alerts and an email notification announcing an alert, that may compel action to reach out to the vendor, is triggered.

"If something changes, we get a notification and can respond accordingly. This is extremely beneficial to our Vendor Management Department in mitigating risk."

Jeff Waite, Vendor Management Director

"I think just knowing you have Argos Risk's AR Surveillance running in the background makes me feel better about the additional oversight we have on our vendors. Argos Risk tends to error on the conservative side, so we do get some "false positives" that we work through. That being said, I would rather have the monitoring in place knowing that if something changes with the vendor, we will be made aware of the change and can respond accordingly," added Waite.

In closing, Supreme Lending currently utilizes AR Surveillance in Vendor Management. "As additional monitoring features are added, we could also see this service being useful for our IT/InfoSec teams," said Waite.

AR Surveillance helps companies manage risk in third-party relationships. It provides a valuable easy-to-understand Dashboard that generates color-coded 0 to 100 scale key metrics to provide overall insight and continuous monitoring of crucial vendors.
